HISTORICAL AND BIOGRAPHICAL INFORMATION

In 1982, University of Missouri-Columbia professors Melvin Bradley (animal science) and Duane Dailey (photojournalism) began a research project on the history of the Missouri mule. They traveled the state interviewing and photographing people involved in the mule trade as well as farmers, loggers, miners, the military, etc. who used mules for labor.

To help fund the project, a private group called Missouri Mule Skinners Society was formed in 1983 at the urging of Larry Harper, editor of Missouri Ruralist magazine. Dues to the Society were $25 and they went toward Bradley and Dailey's project. They succeeded in reaching their $10,000 goal, and the pair continued to travel the state amassing a voluminous history on Missouri mules.

Over the next eight years, the interviews were transcribed and issued as an eight-volume set Recollections of Missouri Mules published by the University of Missouri-Columbia Extension Division in 1991. Two years after that, Bradley published a two-volume book The Missouri Mule: His Origins and Times that included stories from the oral history project as well as many of Dailey's photographs.

RECOLLECTIONS OF MISSOURI MULES (1970-1991)

Extent: 2.5 Cubic Feet

Arrangement: By format, then alphabetical by interviewee surname

Scope and Content

Recollections of Missouri Mules was a nine-year project documenting an oral history of the mule industry in Missouri. University of Missouri-Columbia professors Melvin Bradley (animal science) and Duane Dailey (photojournalism) spearheaded the research project. They traveled the state interviewing and photographing people involved in the mule trade as well as farmers, loggers, miners, the military, etc. who used mules for labor.

Some transcripts contain a first draft and a final draft. Additional interviewers were Bob Taber, Dow Jenkins, R.B. George and Cindy Elliott. Other states represented are Kansas, Indiana, New Mexico, Oregon and Virginia, those being military-related mule interviews.
